

Spoofy

By Kent Kaing

Spoofy is a music streaming app similar to Spotify. As the name suggests it is a spoof version of Spotify. The main gimmick of the app is that all the basic functionality of a regular music app has a twist to it. When you search for a song, it will not play the song you clicked on. Instead, it will play a random song from that artist. Another example is when you go to pause a song and play it again, instead of playing it from the start it restarts the song. Skipping a track would make you skip two tracks instead. So, if you really wanted to listen to the next song, you would have to skip forward once and then skip back once. Another feature would be to change the shuffle button. Not only will it randomize the playlist, but it will also randomize the starting point of the song. Rather than starting at the beginning of the track, it could start from anywhere. It could begin in the middle or even with one second left. The loop button repeats the next song instead of the current one. So, to repeat the current song, you would have to go back to the previous track, click repeat, and listen to the previous song.

